Then come clauses amending various existing Acla, both as to "Dwellings of the Working Clastes" and as to Lodging-houses: and among these attention should be called to the rules laid down for the guidance of arbitrators appointed to fix values of pramises required by the local authority. It is ordered, for example, that compensation, so far as it is based on rental, shall be based on the readab privable by the proper number of inhabitants of the dwelling in other words, that rants forced up by overcrowding shall not be taken as the basis, of compensation. - This and similar oprovisions are very necessary, as experience has shown. For the rest, there are several good and some donstrat provisions in the Bill. The latter, generally speaking, are the provisions which guard the permissive character of much of this class of legislation. The Bill is still somewhat timid There is too much " in iv" in it, and too little "shall." With this has to be rackoned the slowness of the propedure provided in the case of of a condemned area. When a local authority has decided that a group of buildings ought to to be rebuilt, it may pass a resolution to that effect; it may then serve a , notice ou the owner or lesse; it may then petition the Local Government Board for an otler sinctioning the scheme; and it may then purchase the area by agreement. This is surely rather a feeble conclusion of all these deliberate steps. But if the local authority and the awner come to terms, the Legal Government order shall lifst be published, and within two mouths of its publication the owner may petition the Local Gevernment Board against it and "if the order shall be provisional and soit is confirmed by Act of Parliament." Thus it would seem that a recalcitrant own r may dofy both the Sounty Conneil and the Leed Government Board, or anything; in fast, except Parliament. We do not see how, if this idea, the Bill will help the world forward. It gives no new rights to local
